I'm not really into those kind of games and I'm really too old and self-conscious for portraits chinois, but when deathbypun asked me to post "ten songs I'm listening to or something which should describe me" I saw the opportunity to propose a new Soundomy! mixtape. So, this is Soundomy! 316, a selection of songs that have a unique meaning to me (I'm distorting a little bit the nature of the game, but that's the way I roll). To be honest, at first I was looking for my favourite songs ever - but it was an impossible task. I can't have a top ten list of my favourite songs, I would need at least a hundred songs that would come on top ex-aequo. Note that it is not a chart.

I.e., this selection is missing The Rolling Stones, Barbara, Morrissey, Françoise Hardy, The Pixies, Jacques Brel, Serge Reggiani, Jethro Tull, Van Morrison, Pink Floyd, Bryan Ferry, The Little Rabbits, La Souris Déglinguée, Bjork, Juliette Nourredine, Léo Ferré, Caterina Caselli, Jean Yanne, The Divine Comedy, Vic Chesnutt, Georges Brassens or Laibach. At least.

The link to listen or download the mixtape is at the bottom of the post.
Soundomy! 316

Joy Division - Day of the lords

This is obviously a classic song. I could have thrown at least another ten or fifteen other Joy Div' songs but this one stroke me as being the more modern in the sense that it aged very well. I really like the feeling of active sadness pouring from Day of the lords, and one of my favourite way of listening to it is of course by watching one of the best movies ever, Michael Mann's Heat, where a bit is taken as a soundtrack for the tracking scene on the highway.

Edoardo Bennato - Un giorno credi

I couldn't let this mixtape without at least an Italian song. I hesitate of course with some Franco Battiato or Caterina Caselli's, but this one has everything - great lyrics with a positive message, a final twist and enough strings and brass to make you cry on a good day.

Supergrass - Strange ones

This one comes of course from my Brit-Pop period, heavily influenced by Bernard Lenoir and his L'Inrockuptible radio show. Once again, I could have chose a lot of songs from Blur, Suede, Morrissey or The Divine Comedy (I'm aware I'm stretching Brit-Pop spectrum a bit). But I was looking for something dynamic, uplifting and borderline Happy Mondays. I constantly associate this song with Thomas Disch's book, On wings of song, which is one of the best novel you may read even if you're not into dystopia and science-fiction.

Dominique A - Le Courage des oiseaux

This one was obvious for me. This is simple, minimalist pop song, a man versus his tiny electronic piano, singing simple things (the chorus goes like this, more or less : If only we were brave like birds singing in the cold wind). This is probably one of my first quasi-adult and autonomic musical crush. I remember listening to it on the radio, in a Jean-Louis Foulquier broadcast, and going getting all weird and thinking it was really, really, really great in a way I couldn't really explain. I'm still really susceptible to suggestion, but before that, I had only bought four albums (that I'm not really proud of, to be honest - mass productions from Serge Gainsbourg, Jean-Jacques Goldman, Nirvana and Guns n' Roses) and was leaning heavily to American grunge/indie rock or French punk bands due to my high-school friends taste. One could so call Le Courage des oiseaux a cornerstone of my really great musical taste. Note that I really like also Diabologum's noisy pop cover of this song.

Philippe Katerine - Mon cœur balance

I knew Katerine before Mon cœur balance thanks again to Jean-Louis Foulquier, since he invited what was at those times a duo, Katerine & Bruno (Katerine being a girl first name in French and Bruno being his alleged sister - that could be true, I really don't know neither care). I remember some very strange, minimalistic little songs with a strong personality (a bit like Michel Gondry's Oui-Oui, but I discovered Oui-Oui much later, when I went to college). Mon cœur balance (My heart is hesitating) was a funny departure from those moments and a continuation of some kind of a weird homoeroticism already found in Mon bel Andalou (when it was not sung by Bruno, of course). I discovered it on a Rosebud sample I probably got when I was reading Les Inrockuptibles (when it was still monthly and one of the best cultural magazine in the world, and probably one of the most elegant).

Nina Simone - Cherish

You could say that before mid-aughties and beginning to become an influent blogger I was only really into chanson française (oh the hours spent listening to the awfully corny Radio Douce France when I was in college !) and rock'n'roll. Internet introduced me to hip-hop, reggae, soul, jazz and blues, all things I disliked very much just before. I say Internet, but I could explicitly denounce a group of people from Laval. I hesitated for this choice between Cherish and Feeling good. I love Feeling good because of the brasses and the radiant positiveness of the song. It also illustrate pleasantly the end of Kiss kiss (bang bang), an excellent British movie not to be confused with the not that good Kiss kiss bang bang. In the end, I chosed Cherish instead of Feeling good mostly because I already put the last one too many times in my mixtapes, and because Cherish is really great, very soft, very cosy and comfortable - the kind of comfort you found with a tiny cute animal or your loved one under wool covers - some kind of animal heat that makes you glad to be alive.

The Pastels - Token collecting

The Pastels was a band I thought of being from New-Zealand, for whatever reason, even if they were from Glasgow, a city which is definitively not in South-Pacific. I lived in a lie for more than twenty years - it was something I was listening to constantly when I was in college. It was nineties music in the best sense of the term, something that could have been on a Hal Hartley's movie soundtrack. This song reminds me a bit of something by Belle & Sebastian, but with more texture, and socially more acceptable. Even if you can feel some electrical tension, it manages to stay a soft ballad mainly thanks to the voice of the singer.

Diabologum - Les Garçons ont toujours raison

I discovered Diabologum in 1996 with #3, their aptly named third album. In the end of 1996, with the social tension produced by the clash of a right-wing government with left-wing civil servants defending their privileges, there were only two choices of music to listen to - you either go full Noir Désir (with the also numerical 666.667 Club and its prophetic call - Charlie, défend-moi) or #3, if you were still mourning previous winter suicide of Guy Debord. I saw them live in a tiny bar Rue Defly in Nice, they almost cancelled the concert since their van ran out of fuel just before arriving. I didn't like crowd, so I tend to avoid live music venues (I maybe have seen twenty concerts in my life), but I'm really glad to have gone to their show - it was really great. Anyway, even if I prefer their post-noisy pop, slightly experimental album, I always loved the simplicity of their previous albums, especially the powerpop anthem Les Garçons ont toujours raison (Boys are always right) self-mocking the youth tendencies to take itself too seriously.

Ideal - Erschiessen

Another one of my favourite college song, I discovered this NDW song thanks to a slightly older friend that lived in Germany in his childhood. The combination of the desperate lyrics (Let's go get shot !) from a desperate time (the atmosphere of Cold War Germany was present in my earliest memories, my father having been in the French occupation troops at those times) and the really energetic music is just great.

Phoenix - If I ever feel better

I saw the videoclip of this song and found almost on the spot in love with this late seventies aesthetic. I looked for the lyrics when I heard the song, and I was really troubled by the result - it seems the strong French accent of the singer was fucking up with crowdsourcers (if I remember correctly, it was something like "they say an ant can be a star...").
